Dr. C. L. Laveran Discovers Bacillus Responsible for Gas Gangrene.

IN THE DIRT OF WOUNDS

Nobel Prize Winner New Preparing Serum to Combat Deadly Microbe.

The discovery of a curious but highly suggested bacillus, whose development gunshot wounds is said to be the neipal cause of gas gangrene, is an-meed by Dr. Charles Louis Laveran, the Paris scientist and physician. The results of researches conducted by Dr. Laveran, with the assistance of Dr. Weinberg and Dr. Seguin of the Institut Laveran, with the assistance of Dr. Weinberg and Dr. Seguin of the Institut Pasteur, were first brought to the statention of the Academy of Scientists and have since been described in detail in a Paris despatch to the Lancet of London.

This particular death dealing bacillus, which is an anserobic microbe—one which thrives in the dirt of wounds but succumbs in the open air—has, received from its discoverer the name of histolytic bacillus. It is asserted that nine hours after a culture of the organism is inoculated into the thigh of a guinea pig a progressive local liquefaction is observed. The muscles of the thigh, their sheathes and tissues and the skin itself are digested and transformed into a blood stained pulp and there remains no more of the Gamaged limb than the bare skeleton. The animal auryives only

Dr. Laveran and his assistants are engaged in preparing a serum with h to combat this microbe. The an-cement at this particular time is of which to combat this microbe. The announcement at this particular time is of pacular interest because of the frightful number of faililities caused by gas gangrees in the war. Up to the present the microbe which had brought about the destruction of tissues had not been isolated, though its association with gas forming germs had been suspected.

More than a year ago the Loncet asserted that contrary to general opinion this most modern of wars was proportionately more costly in men than even the notorious Crimean campatan. When there is delay in giving aid the danger of infection and the development of life destroying microbes is of course tromendously increased.

Dr. Laveran was among the first of the scientific to recognize the necessity of new methods in combating the effects of trench fighting and of the greatly increased use of shell fire. He believed changes in modern warfare demanded finances in the scientific treatment of wounds. The first step was to determine accurately the real causes of gas gangreen and he began the exhaustive resourches which have resulted in the dispovery of the histolytic bacillus.

Dr. Laveran has made other contributions of scientific and medical value ard is recognized as an authority by the medical world. He was the discoverry of the parasite technically known as the medical world. He was the discoverry of the parasite technically known as the majorial algemedium. On the other hand, the court had much to say of the "undercurrent of sentiment that seemed to run beneath this case," warning the jury to disregard all this and remember that nothing was to be considered but the point whether she really believed her life to be in danger.

When the news broke yesterday that the House of Representatives in committee of the whole had gone and approved a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for fish hatcheries the 1,500 members of the United Anglers League of New York let out a roar. The tumuit was microphoned to THE SUN office by the league's president, Dr. Benjamin M. Briggs.

"What I want to tell you is this," said the doctor: "For four years we have been trying to get the Government to establish a cod hatchery on the south shore of Long Island. We drew up a bill and Senator O'Gorman got it through the Senate. It was going through the House when the war came on and held it up. A lot of other States copied our bill. Now they've got it approved by the House, and New York, which fathered the movement, is left out. I'd like to know what our Congressmen are doing. Body of Standard Oil Head

Chancellor Day of Syracuse University Delivers Impressive Eulogy.

The body of John D. Archbold, active head of the Standard Oil Company until his death last Tuesday, was placed yesterday in the Archbold mausoleum in the Sleepy Hollow Cemetery after a simple, impressive funeral service at the Archbold home in Tarrytown.

It was followed to the cemetery by hundrede of men who had worked obscurely under Mr. Archbold, as well as by his associates in the control of the company and by many other men of large affairs. The simplicity of the funeral and interment services was according to Mr. Archbold's desire. The late home of the Standard Oil

Day, "to greet even the laborers in the ditch with the greatest cordiality. More than thirty years ago he said that there should be Government regulation of large corporations. He felt that the States were unequal to the task, that the laws were unfair and ununiform. He never grew wrathful over criticisms of his company, saying that all things would be straightened out in time. He had vast faith in the American people and he believed that time would set everything right with them.

Business Was His Recreation.
"He told me on one occasion," continued Chancellor Day, "that business with him was a recreation. Never in my long association with Mr. Archboid did I ever hear him drop from his lips an unkind word about any one or an unworthy word. He never told a story that he had to apologize for."
